Glossary

The following are terms and definitions used in this report. The glossary is provided in order to explain the usage of these terms here. The definitions may not agree with all standard definitions used in the fan community.

Correlation: Shorthand for Pearson's Correlation. The formula used to calculate Pearson's Correlation is

$$r = \frac{\sum_{i=1}^n (X_i - \bar{X})(Y_i - \bar{Y})}{(n-1)S_x S_y}$$

Fandom: A community based around a television show that produces fan fiction. For other definitions of the word fandom, see <http://www.fanhistory.com/wiki/Fandom>

Fan fiction: A story written by fans of a television show. The story is based on the universe a show is based on or characters from that television show. For other definitions of the word fandom, see http://www.fanhistory.com/wiki/Fan\_fiction

FanFiction.Net: A fan fiction archive. According to Quantcast, for July 2009, the site was ranked 892. The site caters to a mostly American audience, though it has a large international contingent who publish stories in languages other than English.

fanfiktion.de: A fan fiction archive. According to Quantcast, for July 2009, the site was ranked 767,620. It has more traffic than the Quantcast number suggests because the site is in German and caters to that audience.

FanWorks.Org: A fan fiction archive. According to Quantcast, for July 2009, the site was ranked 178,607.

FicWad: A fan fiction archive. According to Quantcast, for July 2009, the site was ranked 80,760.

Freedom of Speech Fan Fiction: A fan fiction archive. According to Quantcast, for July 2009, the site was ranked 84,054.

Spoilers: Details that give away a major plot point about an episode before most people have had an opportunity to view it. For other definitions of the word spoiler, see <http://www.fanhistory.com/wiki/Spoiler>
